NATIONAL NATURIST EVENTS CALENDAR

BURNING MAN FESTIVAL

August 28 – September 4, 2006
 Black Rock Desert
 (120 miles north of Reno, Nevada)

“Burning Man is an annual experiment in temporary community dedicated to radical self-expression and radical self-reliance.”

A feature on Burning Man appeared in the Autumn 2005 issue of the SunDial. Although not specifically a naturist or nudist festival, the festival features a clothes-free environment and nudity is quite common.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE – Richard Mason

Haulover Park: The Beach Ahead!

In June 2006, the wrecking ball finally hit “old stinky” – the restroom that has seen the private parts of over 10 million naturists in the past 15 years. Ordinarily that would be a unique expression but the naturists have seen the same private parts so it equals a big Ho-Hum!

We probably should have held a two-part ceremony: first to say thanks for all those years of service, and secondly to say thanks for the start of construction. The Haulover Park management will also be happy to see the new restroom building completed. It was no joy for them to handle the complaints about “old stinky”.

The beach visitors need to be thankful to the residents of Miami-Dade County that voted to tax themselves to pay for the Safe Neighborhood Parks Bond Issue that is funding the construction of the two new restrooms in the designated naturist section, and a total of four for the park.

Further, the beach visitors should appreciate the fact that the management of Miami-Dade County Park & Recreation Department selected Haulover Beach Park to be included in the bond issue at that time. A bond issue that included only a few of its 300 sites. Many of these are also badly in need of funding for improvements.

South Florida Free Beaches' next project is to try to get the park department to put funds in their budget to pay for uniform county police to be stationed in Haulover Beach Park so visitors can feel comfortable about staying on the beach until sundown.

Our requests and efforts to accomplish this during the past three years have not been successful. Our proactive efforts during the past year have irritated some egos and led to a retaliation wherein the park department has revoked the access and parking privileges of the Beach Ambassadors... a shot to their own foot, we think.

However, we will continue and prevail. This is a health and safety issue. Certainly the money is there from the parking revenues which we have learned are being generously given to other groups for their operating expenses.

TNS Eastern Gathering:

I just got back from attending The Naturist Society's Eastern Naturist Gathering (June 19-25) held at the Eastover Resort in Lennox, Massachusetts. If you have never been to a naturist gathering or festival, you are missing out on a pleasant experience. Eastover has over 500 acres full of amenities. The food was excellent and the accommodations more than adequate.

Dozens of seminars on health awareness, spirituality, religion and political action were held. Many went hiking on a portion of the Appalachian Trail. Others enjoyed archery, horseback riding, golf driving and putting, body painting, games, life drawing classes, movies, dancing as well as massage and many more activities. The indoor and outdoor pools were popular, too. Plan to attend a future Gathering or Festival. Information is always listed in The SunDial, or you can check out the schedule at The Naturist Society's website: www.naturistsociety.com

Political Action Around the Nation:

There are anti-nudity actions going on in Kentucky, Kansas and California, as well as Top-Free issues in California, New York and Florida. In Kentucky a bill was introduced that would make mere nudity a sex crime with lifetime GPS tracking. In Kansas the Lake Edun Foundation is barred from having naturist activities on its secluded 60 acre lake front property. The Naturist Action Committee has been successful in Kentucky.

Too much to report here, other than to say the anti-nudity forces are still active nationwide and in parts of Florida. Anyone wanting a copy of the articles on the above incidents can call my office at 305 893 8838.

In Florida, the anti-nudity organizations and associations are still active. They are also busy on the gay and abortion issues. They will be back! That is why South Florida Free Beaches maintains a lobbyist in Tallahassee. Preparation is 9/10s of being successful.

You can support our efforts by donating to our Legal and Political Action Fund or by joining our association. See application and donor form within. We need your support.

Thanks for visiting Haulover. Good Day and Good Luck!

14th Annual Lake Como Run

With its 35 acre private lake, large lap pool, professional clay-surface tennis courts, and sand & grass volleyball courts, Lake Como Family Nudist Resort has great facilities for the active nudist to canoe or swim, to sport or play.

The 14th Annual 5K Run and 2.5K Walk in May drew over 170 runners and walkers, and some brought their own cheering sections, swelling the crowd to over 200. The resort grounds—most of the 200 acres still woodland or wetland—provided a scenic, multi-terrain route that the participants greatly enjoyed. After the award ceremonies, all were free to partake of a healthy food table provided by the resort, and to enjoy the resort facilities for the day—including the more relaxing hot tub, petanque and horse-shoes courts, restaurant and Butt Hutt lakeside bar.

Lake Como also annually hosts, among other events, a volleyball tournament, a classic car show, and two bikers' weekends.

HAULOVER'S NATURIST BEACH

Editorial: URBAN PARKSCAPE—A TALE OF TWO CITIES

According to a 2002 report by The Trust for Public Land, Miami ranks last among the twelve most densely populated U.S. cities in public park land preservation. The city offers only 5.6% of its total land area as public park space, or 3.4 acres per 1000 residents.

No wonder that the Urban Environment League of Greater Miami, in a 2003 letter to Miami City Manager Arriola, commented: “How long has it been since the city had a city-wide parks systems master plan? In the absence of one, there is a perceived loss of safety, diminished participation in park programs, poor maintenance and upkeep, few to no new parks, bandaids rather than solutions, and consistent attacks on public spaces.” (Miami has finally scheduled a number of public workshops on parks starting in October 2006, inviting public input into an announced new Park and Recreation Master Plan.)

New York, Washington D.C., Boston and San Francisco each have 17% or more of their urban landscapes devoted to parks, and ten of the twelve cities provide at least 6.2 acres of park space per 1000 residents.

Chicago has preserved 8.1% of its total land area for parks, or only 4.1 acres per 1000 residents. Despite the city’s second-worst finish in the list, it’s notable that half of Chicago’s park area is on the Lake Michigan shore, and of the 28 miles of the city’s shoreline, 24 are public parks—sometimes merely a few hundred yards’ width of tree-lined walk path or beach between the Outer Drive and the lake, but also including spacious Lincoln, Grant and Jackson Parks. This makes at least lakeside Chicago deserving of the city motto Urbs in Horto—“City in a Garden”.

It could have been otherwise. At the beginning of the 20th century, park space was scant in the heavily industrial “city of the broad shoulders”. Following on the World Columbian Exposition, which resulted in the renovation of Jackson Park on the south lakeshore, then the largest park space in the city, the Commercial Club of Chicago, an influential civic improvement society, boasting as members Cyrus McCormack, George Pullman, Marshall Field, and other wealthy industrialists, commissioned a Plan of Chicago that was published in 1909.

The work of two architects—French-trained Edward H. Bennett and largely self-taught Daniel Hudson Burnham—the plan displayed a comprehensive long-term vision, including transportation improvements, the construction of several broad boulevards in the city, new museums, and the creation of parks within walking distance of every home. On the lakefront, it proposed the expansion of Grant Park into “a spacious and attractive public garden”, and a greatly expanded Lincoln Park. Due to the subsequent implementation of most of the plan, Chicagoans can now jog or bike away from traffic along most of Chicago’s Lake Michigan shoreline, go fishing or boating, or swim or sun at numerous city beaches. Because Burnham became the chief salesman for the plan to the city, the Plan of Chicago is now usually referred to as the “Burnham Plan”.

In one sense, the Burnham Plan was not a new development for the city. A good example of Chicago’s ongoing commitment to the expansion of public park space is Lincoln Park. Originally a small public cemetery, the city first created Lake Park as a 60 acre park in the 1860’s, shortly renaming it Lincoln Park in honor of the assassinated President. The park was expanded even before the Burnham plan was proposed in 1909, and was last expanded in the 1950’s to comprise a total of 1,208 lakeside acres, including a major zoo, conservatory, and yacht harbor.

Similarly, in the 1840’s, part of the area that is now Grant Park was designated as “public ground forever to remain vacant of [commercial] building”. Renamed for the 18th President in 1901, and greatly enlarged under the Burnham Plan, the park now includes the world-class Chicago Art Institute, Field Museum of Natural History, the Adler Planetarium, and Shedd Aquarium—and it still has ample green space. In the 21st century, park expansion is still ongoing, as old rail beds are being removed to make room for additional public green space in the new adjoining Millennium Park along Michigan Avenue. At 319 acres, Chicago’s “front yard” park is ten times the size of Miami’s 32 acre Bayfront Park. Adding 600-acre Jackson Park into the mix, with its Museum of Science and Industry and its lagoons and beach, the three major Chicago lakeside parks alone offer 2,127 acres of recreation area on Lake Michigan.

The statistics of the Trust for Public Land include only park land within city boundaries. Since the City of Miami occupies a much smaller part of its county than Chicago, perhaps the picture is better on a county level? Hardly. In 1915, Chicago’s Cook County established the Cook County Forest Preserve District, which now maintains 67,000 acres of public park land outside the Chicago city limits. (The Forest Preserve District has a mandate to acquire and manage up to 75,000 acres of park land in the county.) As this park land—much of it along the Des Plaines River and other waterways—rings the city, it greatly enhances the park space available to residents living in neighborhoods away from the lake, supplementing the park space created within the city by the Burnham Plan.

By comparison, Miami-Dade County has preserved 12,000 acres as county park land. As a percentage of total area, this is 1% park land for Miami-Dade, and 4.3% for Cook. Per 1000 residents, Miami-Dade County offers about 5 acres of park land, Cook County 12.5 acres. And, it should be noted that Miami-Dade County, with a total area of 1.55 million acres, is larger than 1.04 million-acre Cook. Further, if the comparison is made only for dry land, Miami-

Keeping Our Beaches Bare

Dear Haulover Beach Friends:

When our naturist leaders' dream of creating a beach where you could shed your clothing along with your cares finally became a reality, you rewarded us with your commitment. Through one challenge after another, your love for and devotion to this beach kept us going. Your unconditional support and dedication has brought us to where we are today—the keepers of one of the world's most treasured and most visited clothing-optional beaches.

Thank you for standing behind the two nonprofit organizations: B.E.A.C.H.E.S. Foundation and South Florida Free Beaches. As the political winds shift back and forth, we are ever vigilant and we trust that you will continue supporting us. May we suggest a particularly painless and easy way of showing your ongoing support?

Consider when you choose to buy refreshments and beach accessories, that as the only 501 (c) (3) federally-chartered nonprofit operating at Haulover, B.E.A.C.H.E.S. is committed to putting all its revenue after expenses into securing beach improvements and amenities, naturist education, legal defense and government accountability – to protect your beach, and your choice to be clothes-free. In that sense, you, the beach users and our fellow naturists, are our shareholders. You can't say that about any other area commercial enterprise.

So why not spend your money where it will do the most for the future of Haulover's naturist beach? That's real value for your dollar. Please consider purchasing something from B.E.A.C.H.E.S. Foundation's Beach Mall during your beach day.

Experience a professional therapeutic massage in the calming ocean breeze. Cool off with a fresh fruit treat: a frozen fruit bar, a frozen fruit tropical blend, or go healthy with a fresh fruit salad. Indulge in our exotic soft frozen Cappuccino Mocha Royale, or keep it simple with a scoop of our 9 premium ice creams garnished with your choice of 15 different toppings – we even offer sugar-free/low-fat flavors. We carry the latest styles of sunglasses, sunscreen and tanning products, as well as Haulover souvenirs, beach gear, and accessories. For your reading pleasure, see us for the latest naturist travel magazines, newsletters and books.

Don't waste precious beach time shopping when we can meet your needs at the beach or through our web site store. And remember– we will deliver your custom order to your beach location—just call 1-866-29-BEACH. We will strive to give good value, while we promise to put your money back into protecting and improving this beach so it will be there for you, your family and friends to enjoy au natural in the years to come.

Your patronage is needed for Haulover improvements and protection of its nude use. Remember, we need you and you need us! See you at the beach!

Virginia Key: Part Two – The Fight by David Baum

(Part one appeared in the Spring 2006 SunDial edition, available online at www.sffb.com/sundial.html.)

Earlier we told the story of how clothes-free use became established at Virginia Key in the 1970's, after desegregation ended its earlier official Dade county designation as South Florida's "colored only" beach, and the establishment of South Florida Free Beaches in June 1981. This was the time of the creation of a number of free beach advocacy groups, including Beachfront USA in California and The Naturist Society, based in Wisconsin, to promote and defend clothing-optional use of public beaches.

SFFB members gave radio and newspaper interviews, including write-ups in the Naturist Society's new magazine, Clothed with the Sun (now N Magazine). Under the leadership of founders Tom Chittenden and Barbara Peterson, SFFB grew into an organization with hundreds of members and became one of the most organized free beach groups in the country by the time it was hardly a year old...just in time to fight for Virginia Key.

The first ripple of trouble came with the announcement that the City of Miami wanted to take control of Virginia Key from Dade County and develop a large waterfront park there. The friendly police told the club that the city had a different attitude than the county: the beach nudists might soon have to get dressed! South Florida Free Beaches was facing its first real threat.

PRELIMINARIES

The club had requested a hearing before the City Commission for April 1st, but was not notified that they were on the agenda until after that date. Now, they would have to wait until May 11th. Meanwhile, a meeting with the police was arranged.

Dressed in business attire, Tom, club attorney Bob Korschun, club president Gary Bryant and Ellen, the club secretary, met in a police lieutenant's office on April 7th. They discovered other people had been invited to the meeting: a state attorney, the president of the Key Biscayne Chamber of Commerce, a reporter from The Islander news, a rep from the Parks and Recreation Department, some city and county officers, and two local nudist camp representatives.

Plans for Virginia Key's future were discussed, with SFFB requesting a "European-style" beach area on the north end of the redevelopment area. They proposed a one dollar user fee to defray the costs of additional lifeguards and park rangers. Although the Parks Department was agreeable to this, the police lieutenant was not, saying that nudity was technically illegal and not acceptable with the redevelopment situation.

They discussed points of law and the status of clothing optional beaches around the country. When asked where they would go if forced off the beach, one nudist camp representative said that they didn't need a nude beach, since they were welcome at his nudist camp. He added that SFFB had not been accepted into the American Sunbathing Association (now AANR) because the beach had not been legally designated. He then handed them a copy of Clothed with the Sun and noted an ad showing Virginia Key to be clothing optional.

Club president Gary corrected his information by saying that the "ad" was actually a listing of clothing-optional beaches around the world. Gary then presented an actual ad for Virginia Key Beach from the 1980 Metro Department of Tourism's own publication Miami, See It Like a Native. That got their attention!

The meeting ended with the police telling them that they had 60 days to get a city variance or else they would start enforcing the law and make arrests. The next Miami City Commission meeting was scheduled for May 11, a little more than a month away. South Florida Free Beaches had a lot of work to do.

During this time, the clothing-optional beach above West Palm Beach on Singer Island came under state control and was now closed to nudity, leaving Virginia Key South Florida's only clothing optional beach. (See article on state parks on page 13 in Spring 2006 SunDial.)

LOBBYING

SFFB wrote a seven-page proposal for the city officials to read. It told about the club, its philosophy, activities, other free beaches, nudism, and tourism benefits. It mentioned Florida Statute 800.03, which allows nudity "... in a place set aside for that purpose" and asked that the city set aside a portion of Virginia Key. It mentioned the many years of nude use there and how the club would continue to use the beach with great cooperation and respect toward police and government officials.

Things started to look up when an April 18th Miami Herald editorial supported an area set aside for a "European-style" beach, referring to Virginia Key as a "Special Beach." SFFB representatives began calling the Mayor, Vice Mayor, City Manager and City Commissioners to make appointments. One commissioner who had earlier said he supported the club and wanted a follow-up call was "not in" or "too busy" to talk, and he never returned their calls.

On April 20th, club president Gary and secretary Ellen met with the City Manager's assistant for about 15 minutes. He felt there would be little difficulty in acquiring the beach, as long as the mayor favored it.

So on April 29th, Gary met with the Mayor's assistant who gave "praise and assurance" that they should have no trouble meeting their goal. Gary was so sure of victory that he invited Naturist Society founder Lee Baxandall to Miami for the historic event.

Virginia Key: Part Two – The Fight by David Baum

In a May 5th meeting with SFFB board member Grant Sheckler, one commissioner was “non-committal, but liberal and open-minded,” suggesting the club rent the beach and run it themselves. Grant explained that that was not possible since SFFB was a non-profit corporation.

The next day Gary Bryant met with another commissioner who seemed supportive, even suggesting annual family passes for $25, since a dollar a person would be too much for regular beach users. He told Gary that it was “time for Miami to get rid of its backward town attitude and step forward into the 80’s.” He said the club had his support and his vote on May 11.

Gary, Ellen and another board member met with the assistant of the last commissioner on May 10th. The assistant constantly smiled and told them the proposal was sound and he would discuss it with the commissioner. What Gary wasn’t told was that same commissioner went on the evening news and said something about “...if they want to act like a bunch of animals...” and “if they want a nude beach let them buy one...”

THE VOTE: Tuesday May 11th

Item #14 on the Miami City Commission Agenda simply stated: “Personal appearance by representatives of South Florida Free Beaches, Inc. regarding the public beach at Virginia Key.” It was a full agenda, with other items including citizens requesting funding for organizations and youth clubs, neighborhood, park and street improvements, permits for sidewalk cafes, and making noise complaints.

Shortly after 7 PM, our agenda item came up. One commissioner said that our tourists come from Latin America, not Europe, and Latin Americans do not want clothing-optional beaches! “Doc” McClesky remembers SFFB being asked why they wanted to use a section of Miami’s only beach, when Dade County had lots of beach space, then suggested a tiny swampy area along Crandon Park.

It became apparent that none of the commissioners had really read the proposal, and their minds were already made up. Bob Korschun remembers that the club had picked Tom to speak at this meeting, but the Commission cut him off. But Doc also remembers the audience being asked who favored the beach, and most of the hands went up.

Just before the vote was taken, one commissioner who had said he supported us stated that he knew what it was like to be discriminated against. He abstained from voting. The rest of the commission voted against setting an area aside for nude recreation. After all that hard work to save their beach, it was all over. SFFB had fought its first big battle and lost. The first Golden Age of South Florida Free Beaches was at an end.

SFFB presents the case for a “European-style” naturist beach to the media (1982)

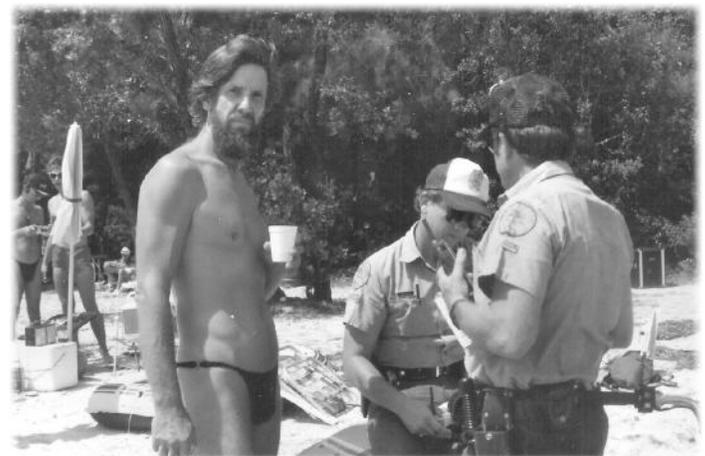

AFTERMATH

There were small turnouts on Virginia Key beach in the weeks and months that followed. There were other attempts to regain the beach in the following months and years, including an unsuccessful lawsuit by SFFB against the City of Miami.

The proposed park was never built. Virginia Key beach areas were closed to the public later in 1982, beginning 20 years of neglect. In 2002, an 82-acre beach park there was designated a National Heritage Site, commemorating its use as the “colored only” beach in the days of segregation. It does not now permit clothes-free use.

Nine years after the loss of Virginia Key, in July 1991, after a lot of hard work to educate the authorities and work within the law, SFFB created a new naturist beach on the north end of Metro-Dade County’s Haulover Beach Park. The City of Miami’s loss was Metro-Dade County’s gain. The second Golden Age of South Florida Free Beaches had begun! ☀

World Naked Bike Ride

The World Naked Bike Ride has been held annually since 2004 in cities throughout the world, to protest our dependence on fossil fuels. The 2006 WNBR official ride date was June 10.

London had 58 riders in 2004, and around 250 riders in 2005. This year, according to Jesse Schust of the London Ride Planning Collective, the 2006 London ride started out with an official count of almost 700 participants, although perhaps an additional hundred or more joined en route. The oldest participant was a woman from York, who was unable to ride nude last year because of the cold weather, but did so this year, remarking: "I'm now a fit and healthy 84 year old, and I love being free from the restrictions of clothes. I also revel in living a car-free life. By remaining very active, I benefit from the pleasure that always follows exertion." London police blocked traffic along the bike route, and bobbies on bicycles rode with the nude riders as an escort.

In nearby Brighton, however, which planned its first ride, Sussex Police Chief Superintendent Jeremy Paine threatened to arrest those exposing their "rude bits"...despite ride support from Keith Taylor, Convenor of Brighton Green Councillors, who said: "The World Naked Bike Ride is an effective way of getting the serious message across that all road users are vulnerable to fumes and accidents, despite what the prudish police are saying. 32,000 people died prematurely last year from respiratory disease, the majority of which is caused by cars. Now that is offensive!" Nick Sayers, WNBR Brighton & Hove coordinator, said: "The threat of arrest is bizarre...We're bombarded in daily life with sexual images of scantily-clad, 'perfect' bodies. In contrast, WNBR is intended as a non-sexual celebration of the human body...The thousands of people who witnessed the ride in London last year were overwhelmingly enthusiastic, supportive and entertained. Only one complaint was received by the Metropolitan Police after the ride." Brighton ride organizers advised the participants to cover up their "rude bits", and there were no arrests. Ironically, the ride ended with a nude swim at Brighton's naturist Black Rock beach.

In the USA, due to police harassment and some arrests, WNBR attendance declined in Chicago from several hundred in 2004 to a few dozen in 2006. (Curiously, Chicago's current Mayor Daley, early in his tenure, once suggested designating a clothing-option beach area in the city.) In Portland, Oregon, where the ride was held around midnight this year, onlookers estimated as many as 500 nude or semi-nude riders, making its contingent probably the largest in the US. No incidents were reported. San Francisco's daylight ride had about 60 participants, again without incident or police interference.

In all, 36 US cities were listed as World Naked Bike Race participants for 2006. ☀

More about nudism than you ever wanted to know

The Nudist Idea. A comprehensive look at modern social nudism and its antecedents, this 702-page hardback covers the origins of the movement in Germany, its spread to France and England, and its leap across the Atlantic to the United States. With special emphasis on the "freebeach" (or nudist beach) European origins and the history of the freebeach struggle in the United States.

Was the "Father of Modern Social Nudism" a proto-Nazi?

Nakedness [Die Nacktheit]. The "Old Testament" of modern social nudism, this is the first translation into English of the hundred-year-old book by Richard Ungewitter that launched the movement, with an extensive Introduction and notes by Cec Cinder, Ph.D., ten drawings by Bili Turner and translation by Tessa Wilson.

RIP CURRENTS

Break the Grip of the Rip!

Rip currents are powerful currents of water moving away from shore. They can sweep even the strongest swimmer out to sea.

IF CAUGHT IN A RIP CURRENT

- ◆ Don't fight the current
- ◆ Swim out of the current, then to shore
- ◆ If you can't escape, float or tread water
- ◆ If you need help, call or wave for assistance

SAFETY

- ◆ Know how to swim
- ◆ Never swim alone
- ◆ If in doubt, don't go out

Dade has 1.25 million acres, Cook only 0.6 million. This only underscores how very bad a job metro Miami has done of preserving public green space for its citizens.

Well, maybe metro Miami is shy on park land, but it does have great beaches. Yes, but it also has one of the worse public transportation systems for an area of its population density. And South Florida is hardly bike-friendly. So, you're probably going to drive to the beach. The burgeoning growth of blocks of high-rise condos act as real and psychological barriers to much of the shore, where developers are putting up a solid row of fortress towers overshadowing the ocean, and calling this "visionary".

If you're looking for someplace relatively quiet and at least a little removed from traffic and the bustle of the city, Miami-Dade County's two still relatively pristine ocean-front parks, Haulover and Crandon, are your prime choices. It is therefore imperative that these parks be retained intact, with thoughtful and restrained improvement, and without loss of green space. With rising property costs, and the influence of lobbyists pushing for development on local politicians, it's unlikely the county will acquire much more public land, outside of a major philanthropic contribution.

Developers can't help drooling when they see Haulover. Granted, Haulover may currently be a selling point for the new condominiums in Sunny Isles just to the north—but what happens after all the land there is built over? Just imagine how much money could be made by developing even a part of Haulover.

This isn't a totally idle speculation. We know that at its incorporation in the 1990's the City of Sunny Isles Beach had hoped to have gotten control of Haulover, including the park within the city boundaries on its initial planning map. There was even a development plan drawn up for the park, including commercialization.

Development is inevitable, and necessary—but it must be reasonable and balanced. The truly visionary Plan of Chicago noted the importance of expansive and accessible public parks, museums, and other cultural amenities to creating a truly livable and world-class urban environment. It also showed how the city could fund these improvements. The politicians agreed, and the plan was implemented.

Maybe we can't entirely fault the Miami moneyed interests that the concept of commerce backing public improvements for the general good seems to have become obsolete, and our politicians for not thinking beyond the next election.

Maybe the root problem is that many residents seem to prefer spending their time running up their credit card debt at the malls, rather than having a family picnic in the park or visiting a museum, and thus they're only getting what they want, and deserve. ☼
